

Woman's Mangled Body Not Missing Cadaver

The surgically dissected body of an unidentified woman found Thursday in an abandoned northeast Oklahoma City house is not a missing cadaver, police said Saturday.

A check of morgue records revealed no missing bodies used for medical purposes, and detectives believe the woman was killed and then dissected, officers said.

Detectives also said a check of current missing persons files failed to turn up a missing person matching the description of the dead woman.

Dr. A. Jay Chapman, state medical examiner, said Friday that an autopsy revealed the woman had been "dissected in an anatomically correct fashion."

Chapman said the body mangled body was that of a white woman, between 5 feet and 5 feet 4 and between 25- and 25-year-old with brown hair.

The body was found Thursday in the living room of a house at 223 N.W. 8 shortly after 3 p.m. by three oil field workers employed at a nearby drilling site.

Parts of the decapitated body, including the head, were found strewn in the living room, and investigators originally believed the body had been torn apart by scavenging dogs.

GIRL, GRANDFATHER VICTIMS Okmulgee Blaze Kills 2

OKMULGEE — A pre-dawn house fire claimed the lives of an Okmulgee man and his 7-year-old granddaughter Saturday, fire officials said.

Fire fighters said they found the body of young Terry Jefferson near the doorway of the cement block and frame home, fire grandfather, Herbert Whitson, 58, with whom she and her mother had been living, was discovered just down the hall, officials said.

Both apparently died of heat and smoke inhalation, officials said.

The child's mother, a recent divorcee, reportedly was at work when the first alarm was turned in by a neighbor at 2:06 a.m. Whitson's wife was recuperating from a recent illness at a local hospital, according to a fire department spokesman.

The flames, which gutted all but a back bedroom of the single-story residence, were brought under control shortly after 3 a.m., officials said.

Authorities reported cause of the blaze remained under investigation but said preliminary indications were that it started in the living room area and was apparently ignited by an electrical short.
