

APPROCIATED BY THE POLICE, James Castiglione, one of 60 honored by Philadelphia police yesterday, is also appreciated by his family — his mother, Mrs. Vito Castiglione, who is bestowing a kiss on him, and his sister, Annette Castiglione (background). At right his girlfriend, Helen Monchetti, Castiglione, of North Jersey, received a heroism award yesterday for apprehending a suspect in an attempted rape.

From Phila. police, a thank-you 60 honored for coming to the aid of officers

By Dick Cooper
Sixty men and women were honored by Philadelphia police yesterday for coming to the aid of officers in various ways. The ceremony was held in the Police Administration Building, at Eighth and Race Streets, as part of the department's observance of National Police Week.

Police Commissioner James J. Solomon, who presided over the ceremony, said that it was a privilege to honor these individuals. He noted that many of the recipients were ordinary citizens who acted heroically in the face of danger.

Among the recipients were several police officers who were injured in the line of duty, and several civilians who provided crucial assistance during emergencies.

The ceremony was a testament to the bravery and dedication of the Philadelphia police force and the community members who support them.

Investigators checking rug fibers in the Reinert slaying inquiry

By Julia Cole and Frederick Chock
Investigators working on the nearly three-week slaying of Upper Merion High School English teacher Brian Reinert are comparing carpet fibers obtained in a search of the former home of Jay C. Smith, the high school's former principal with fibers found on Mrs. Reinert's body.

The source also said that published reports that the investigation was near a conclusion were exaggerated.

Mrs. Reinert's body was found in the back of her car in the parking lot of a motel in a suburb of Harrisburg on June 25. Preliminary tests indicated that the 27-year-old driver died from asphyxiation, possibly as a result of adhesive tape that had been placed over her face.

Labor tests showed that Mrs. Reinert's death may have been caused by an injection of morphine.

Police have been looking for Mrs. Reinert's two children, Karen, 12, and Michael, 11, since the body was found. The two children were last seen with their mother at her Andover home on June 22.

Smith and Upper Merion High School English teacher William S. Bradford Jr. have been the focus of the state police's investigation since the beginning.

Smith is serving a two-and-a-half-year prison sentence for possession of drugs and firearms and a concurrent two-and-a-half-year sentence for attempting to kill a substance abuse counselor at a club where he is awaiting sentencing on a charge of having robbed a second substance abuse counselor and other charges.

Smith appeared in a Harrisburg courtroom to begin his jail sentence a few hours after Mrs. Reinert's body was discovered on June 25.

Police found a comb in the back of Mrs. Reinert's car that was encrusted with the identifying words of the U.S. Army Reserve, 76th Avn. Co., 2nd Bn., 1st Lt. Col. Robert A. Smith, a volunteer in the Army Reserve. It is estimated at more than $1 million.

Most of the items are in the form of several hundred thousand-dollar worth of miscellaneous pieces that Mrs. Reinert took out in the months before her death. Bradford is the beneficiary of the police and is identified in a will that Mrs. Reinert signed a few weeks before her death as "my true husband."

Friends of Mrs. Reinert said that she had been having an affair with Bradford for four years and that they planned to go to England in the summer of 1979 and get married.

Bradford has refused to cooperate with investigators. Neither he nor Smith has been charged with any wrongdoing in the Reinert case.

However, Bradford is the subject of a civil lawsuit in Delaware County Superior Court that was filed by the acting administrator of the Reinert estate. The suit, which is still pending, seeks to have Bradford estopped for $20,000 that Mrs. Reinert attempted to give him to invest a few weeks before her death.
