TEACHER/Bill designed to deter drug abuse

From Page 1

"She was doing it, but a lot of other judges weren't," said Leo Jan Thomas, the department's legislative affairs director.

Thomas said she was glad the bill got through the Legislature. "Isn't that exciting?" she asked. Thomas, who also is an addiction counselor, said she knew the law to help some kids she sees at Pasco Middle was freeing them from drugs and alcohol.

But even when teachers and counselors suspected their children were using drugs — or, in some cases, when teachers' suspicions were based on a tip — there wasn't always a way to compel them to take a test, she said.

Thomas' immediate goal is to use the funds to identify children with addictions to help them get into treatment programs, she said. Other, ending an addiction will end the problems that landed the kids in the judicial system in the first place.

Thomas said Friday he hopes the threat of random drug testing will help keep teenagers from using

"She came to us last summer because she was concerned about these children. Talking to her did fire us up to file this bill."

State Rep. Mike Fasano (R-New Port Richey) is sponsoring the bill and wouldn't speculate whether he would sign it.

The governor doesn't have to sign bills for them to become law; dozens of bills go on the books every year simply because the governor doesn't veto them.

WOMAN

Auger's brother-in-law, Al Flukens, said one detective told him that Auger may have lost the finger accidentally — as if it was jammed in a car door.

Both Young and Flukens said the missing woman drinks heavily and is manic depressive. She had not taken her prescription medicine since being released from an involuntary mental health evaluation two weeks ago, they said.

"She hangs out with whoever will be her friend. She's wild,"

Young said. "You can't deal with her when she's so manic as she is. She gets in your face and doesn't shut up."

"She's constantly talking to herself," Flukens added. "You can tell right away she's ill."

A native of New York, Auger's mental illness manifested itself about 10 years ago, both Flukens and Young said. It contributed to her divorce about five years ago. Her three children live in the area with her ex-husband.

Anyone with information about Auger is asked to call Detective Jeff Bouquet at (800) 864-2862, Ext. 7427.
