Northwest Fisherman re-indicted in Alaska

KETCHIKAN (AP) — A Ketchikan grand jury Friday re-indicted John Paul on eight counts of murder in connection with the 1982 slayings of the owners and crew of the 22-year-old fisherman and boat builder from Ketchikan, Wash., was indicted on the same charges by a different jury last September. U.S. District Court Thomas Schulz dismissed the indictment Aug. 30 because of the way prosecutors handled the case.

A grand jury is instructed not to determine guilt or innocence, but to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to return him to prison, spokesman for the state Attorney General's office said.

Paul was not indicted until he was indicted.

Schulz accused Paul to remain free on bail of $1 million in property and cash bonds, saying Paul had violated the conditions of his release by leaving the Ketchikan jail in May. Paul is in his family's custody in his home town.

Paul is accused of the murders of Mark Coulter and his wife, Dawn, of Ketchikan, Wash., and three 13-year-old children aboard the sealer on Sept. 3 or 4, 1982. Also believed dead on the ship are crew members Doug Peterson and a veterinarian. Prosecutors believe the killer burned the boat a mile from the Ketchikan harbor before fleeing the area.

Prosecutors haven't yet clearly stated what they believe Paul's motive was for the killings.

Paul's trial is scheduled to start on Oct. 6.

Sick inmate paroled to die still alive

SEATTLE (AP) — An inmate suffering from cancer who was granted parole after he expressed a wish to die in a prison hospital, was paroled to die still alive.

Jim Scott in the Virginia Mason Hospital in Seattle with an advanced case of cancer of the testicles as an official parolee to return him to prison, spokesman for the state Parole Board and Department of Corrections said Friday.

"Frankly, we expected him to die," said Dave Curtin, executive secretary for the Parole Board.

The parole is not valid until Scott signs papers agreeing to it. After he refused to sign, the parole was withdrawn by the board, which is now waiting for a recommendation from prison officials on what to do, Curtin said.

"We're going to watch, monitor his condition in terms of treatment and based on his medical prognosis and recommendations, we'll make a recommendation to the board," said Volney Thomas, Department spokesman.

"I don't know what or when that will be," Scott, 42, was granted a humanitarian parole on Sept. 12 and flown from the state penitentiary at Walla Walla to the Seattle hospital the next day. His family had sought the parole with the help of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Scott has served about 12 years of a 15-year sentence for a 1973 rape and a 1971 murder. He was a member of the prison medical staff but was paroled twice but ended up back to prison.

"For all intents, he refused treatment in the prison hospital, saying he'd rather die," said Virginia Mason spokeswoman Bonnie Stockler.

More surgery for girl

PORTLAND — The 12-year-old Portland girl who was paralyzed in April by a rock thrown from a freeway overpass is undergoing a new round of reconstructive surgery.

Dr. Vincent Hospital and Medical Center after a plastic surgery team performed the first in the series of operations scheduled for the girl, according to hospital spokesman Sharon Duzan.

The girl's father, Terry Allen, said the surgery would involve working on her skull and raising the right side of her face, including the eye socket, a procedure by plastic bones back into their proper position. Since the injury, the girl's face has been wider than normal, and she has been unable to smile.

The surgery was held April 12 when the girl broke into a room under the overpass just north of Albany.

Skyport hangs on

SEATTLE — The Skypark project was given a reprieve when a judge ruled that owners of a lot for a proposed business park can't lose the skypark out of its owners' hands.

King County Superior Court Judge John Skypark on Friday dismissed the landowners' eviction action against skypark operator, Tom Knapp, saying developers still need to win approval from city officials.

The judge said the Skypark project is a master plan before the city can be evicted.

A relieved Knapp said he thinks it could take the city over a year to act on the master plan.
