Remembering best, worst on TV during the past year interesting

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Let us remember the best and worst of the television year 1991.

And give thanks for books.

In the best of real-life events category, the competition is intense.

The Persian Gulf War and CNN's emergence as the network of record for breaking news topped the year in TV.

But the war's hopping Scud studs (green and overreacting TV reporters, broadcasting live from nowhere near the front) qualified as new lows in TV news history.

Sex proved just as titillating in reality as in soap operas. Anita Hill's articulate and blunt testimony about alleged harassment from U.S. Supreme Court nominee Thomas — replete with pornographic movie titles — riveted and divided the country.

Who was to be believed? Who looked more believable? Such questions and topics were repeated as William Kennedy Smith's rape trial was carried live, gavel-to-gavel, on CNN, although an electronic dot obscured his accuser's face to protect her privacy.

After Smith's acquittal, the woman agreed to an interview with Diane Sawyer on "Primetime Live" and Patricia Bowman became a household name.

In the best of entertainment programs, the 1991 fall season was highlighted by a walk down memory lane. Nearly every new drama series was a blast from the past, with best being NBC's "I'll Fly Away," about a Southern lawyer and his black housekeeper in the days preceding the Civil Rights movement.

There were numerous lows in the fall season, most notably NBC's "The Adventures of Mark and Brian." Their series, which was only slightly more intellectual than their radio show, was thankfully yanked.

"Man of the People," marking Garry Trudeau's return to television after a 12-year absence, also proved embarrassing and short-lived.

Parents angry police have zero suspects in slayings of teen girls

AUSTIN (AP) — It has been more than three weeks since four teen-age Austin girls were found murdered in a typical store, but police say they still have no suspects.

The girls' parents are upset, angry and ready to seek the community's help in catching whoever committed the crime.

"I'm feeling some anger now and want to see the S.O.B.s caught," said Bob Ayers, the father of one of the victims.

"We need those around them (the murderers) to report them to the police for questioning so that we can see justice done," said Frank Suraci, the stepfather of two other victims.

On Dec. 6, police responded to a fire at an I Can't Believe It's Yogurt shop. They found the four bodies tied up in the back of the store. Police believe the fire was started to cover up the murders.

The victims, who police say were each shot once in the back of the head, were Jennifer Harbison, 17; her sister, Sarah Harbison, 15; Eliza Thomas, 17; and Amy Ayers, 13. Jennifer Harbison and Ms. Thomas were store employees.

Since the investigation began, police have received nearly 1,000 calls, but they still have no suspects.

"I'm sorry to say there's little evidence," Lt. Andrew Waters said Monday. "It's getting very frustrating. We've run through most of the phone tips we've had. The information has dried up and we haven't gotten anything."

Many sources have offered help.

The FBI's behavioral sciences experts are compiling a profile of possible suspects and the state's Department of Public Safety already has developed a profile. The Las Cruces, N.M., police department, which has been trying to solve a similar case since Feb. 1990, also contacted the Austin police.

As part of their own research, police have researched recent parolees with a history of attempting to hide crimes with fires. But, Waters said, none of the efforts have yet led to any suspects.

"We've questioned a lot of people and taken statements from a lot of people but nothing firm has developed," Waters said. "We're still hopeful that the right information could come in at any time.

"We feel that at this point there's bound to be somebody who's heard something about it, at least second-hand. These kinds of things can't be kept quiet. It's got to be almost impossible."
